Purpose: The objective of this study was to empirically observe, whether the Czech companies, which have received a financial subsidy from the European Regional Development Fund during the period of years 2008-2013, reported after the end of the programme better financial results.

Design/methodology/approach: For each of the supported companies, authors have collected financial indicators obtained from their profit and loss statements and balance sheets. The three key performance indicators (KPIs) were selected to measure the firm profitability: return on assets (ROA), return on equity (ROE) and price-cost margin (PCM). Authors employed t-test to initially compare the periods before the firms received the subsidy (2005-2007) and after the end of the programme (2013-2014). Findings: Results of the t-tests indicated that supported companies reported after the end of the programme on average lower return on assets, lower return on equity and lower price-cost margin compared to the period before the programme. However, the statistically significant difference was observed p
